Jason had been watching the X Games on TV. Athletes from all over the world were competing in the most amazing sports. Just then his grandmother walked into the room. "I want to be extreme. Would you really let me do that? You always worry about my safety!" said Jason.

"You will have to follow some rules," said his grandmother. "You can only ride in the park—never on the streets. You have to promise to wear a helmet (头盔). If you hurt yourself too much, I have the right to take your skateboard away. Is it a deal?"

"You bet!" Jason was so excited that he jumped off the sofa. A week later he had a board and a helmet.

On Saturday, his grandmother dropped him off near the park. He was happy to have a grandmother who let him try new things.

Kids in the park were moving quickly up and down the ramps (坡道). They flew into the air and landed as easily as birds. When he watched the X games, Jason felt like he was doing the tricks himself. But watching these kids up close, he knew that none of it was going to be easy. He felt a little bit scared.

Very slowly he carried his board to the ramp. Taking a deep breath, he put his right foot on the board. He kicked off with his left foot. For a few seconds he glided (滑行) along, just waiting to fall. Then he came to a stop. Kicking off again, he waited for the worst to happen. Again, he stayed up. The third time he kicked, lost his balance, and fell hard on his left knee.

It hurt, but it was no big deal! Why had he been so scared? Now he felt calm because things had gone wrong, and he was fine!

Next time he kicked off harder and went fast and farther. "Excellent!" said a girl as she passed him. "Extreme!"　laughed Jason to himself. "Not quite."

24. Jason can try skateboarding if _____.

A. he finished his homework　　B. he liked the sport

C. he obeyed some rules　　D. he won a bet

25. Why did Jason jump off the sofa?

A. Because he was given a board and a helmet.

B. Because he was angry at his grandmother.

C. Because he was going to play outside.

D. Because he was allowed to go skateboarding.

26. How did Jason feel about skateboarding after watching the kids skateboarding in the park?

A. It was hard.　　B. It was exciting.　　C. It was boring.　　D. It was easy.

27. What did the girl praise Jason for?

A. His bravery.　　B. His skill.　　C. His honesty.　　D. His kindness

C

You can remember the face, but can't put a name to it. Many of us have been caught in this embarrassing situation. But researchers say it is often easier to remember someone's name than what they look like.

Twenty-four volunteers were shown 40 pictures of strangers, paired with random(随机的) names. They were given time to memorize the faces and names before being tested on which they thought they had seen before.

The participants could remember up to 85 percent of the names but only 73 percent of the faces. When they were shown a different picture of the same person, the participants could recall only 64 percent of faces, according to the study, led by the University of York.

That may be because faces are only recognized visually(视觉地), while names can be both spoken and written down so appear in our visual and audio memory. When people were shown famous people, they also remembered their names more accurately than their photographs. Co-author Dr Rob Jenkins, from the university's psychology department, said, "Our study suggests that, while many people may be bad at remembering names, they are likely to be even worse at remembering faces. This will surprise many people as it is against our initial understanding. Our life experiences with names and faces have misled us about how our minds work." Remembering names gets harder with age, leading to many uncomfortable moments for middle-aged people when they run into people they know.

But to study whether names are harder to recall than faces, the researchers, whose findings are published in the Quarterly Journal of Experimental Psychology, used a "fair test" where the participants were presented with strangers' names and faces.

28. What can we know according to the research in Paragraph 3?

A. It is certain that names are harder to recall than faces.

B. Remembering names is more easily than remembering faces.

C. Most participants can remember the face not the name to it.

D. The participants can recall 73% faces of the same person.

29. Which of the following will the author agree with?

A. Age will weaken the ability to remember names.

B. Unlike faces, names are only recognized visually.

C. Faces can appear in our visual and audio memory.

D. Rob Jenkins has proved people can remember faces better.

30. What does the underlined word " initial" in Paragraph 4 mean?

A. Clear. B. first. C. Unusual. D. Creative.

31. What can we infer from the last paragraph?

A. People can't remember strangers' names and faces.

B. Recalling names is more difficult than remembering faces.

C. The researcher uses the same method to study another problem.

D. Whether names are harder to recall than faces is further proved.

D

Scientist in Colombia have trained a team of rats to help remove landmines from the countryside. Landmines are small bombs hidden in the ground and designed to explode when someone steps on them.

When trained, the rats can smell special metals in the mines and then signal to their human team. Then why use rats for such an important job?

In the past, dogs have been used to find bombs. Rats have a good sense of smell and can respond to orders, just like dogs do. But rats are much lighter than dogs. They stand less of a chance of setting off the mines, which explode under a certain amount of weight. What's more, the best rats are cheaper to keep than dogs. It costs about the same amount of money to take care of one dog as it does 70 rats.

The rats have already been used in Tanzania, an African country with many landmines. Luisa Fernanda Mendez and her team in Colombia are training the even lighter Wistar rats. These are the white rats with red eyes that scientists often use in laboratory experiments. "They even train their babies to perform their jobs, which saves us a lot of time," Mendez said.

Colombia has the second-highest rate (比率) of deaths from landmine accidents in the world. Last year, land mines killed 695 people—56 of whom were children. A criminal（犯罪）group called the Revolutionary Armed Forces of Colombia, or FARC, as well as other organizations, have placed the mines. FARC are strongly against Colombia's government. The group has placed mines all around its own bases and in many places in the countryside.

In the past, the Colombian government hired peasants and poor farmers to find mines. Many of them died trying to find the well-hidden bombs.

Colombian police official Erick Guzman hopes the team of rats can come to the rescue. "These rats will be a great help," he said.

32. How do rats help to find land mines?

A. By their excellent hearing. B. By their sense of smell.

C. By their special sight. D. By their light weight.

33. What is the advantage of rats over dogs in finding bombs?

A. They are cleverer than dogs.

B. They run faster than dogs.

C. They don't make mines explode as easily.

D. they have a better sense of smell.

34. Which of the following is not true?

A. In the past, dogs have been used to find bombs.

B. Rats are much lighter than dogs.

C. It costs less money to take care of a rat than a dog.

D. Dogs have a better sense of smell than rats.

35. What is the text mainly about?

A. A new way to clear land mines—specially-trained rats .

B. People in Tanzania are suffering from land mines.

C. Dogs are no longer used to find land mines.

D. Land mines have become a great danger to Colombians.

第二节. 七选五（共 5 小题；每小题 2 分，满分 10 分）

根据短文内容，从短文后的选项中选出能填人空白处的最佳选项。选项中有两项 为多余选项。

Volunteering is a great way to support an organization and make a difference in your community. It can also be an opportunity to meet new people and learn new skills. ___36___ And what should we plan for? Here's a guide for beginners.

Step 1: ___37___

Do you want to help the world, or your community? Do you want to build your own skills, make new friends, and learn? Do you love what you do? Do you want to share your gifts with others or give something back? Think about these kinds of questions. That can help you to choose the right direction for your volunteer work.

Step 2: Choose an organization that is meaningful to you.

If you feel strongly about literacy (读写),, volunteer at your local library or find out if there is an organization of volunteer tutors in your area. There are organizations doing all sorts of work. ___38___

Step 3: Start small.

If you already have a busy school life, volunteer your time for an hour or two a week, or perhaps one day a month.___39___ Then, if you find you enjoy the work and have more time to do it, take on more time by time.

Step 4: Get training.

If there is a training course, attend it. If not, talk to the group leaders and other volunteers about their experiences. ___40___

Step 5: Try not to give up.

Volunteer work sometimes involves unpleasant tasks, difficult fellow workers, busy days, or bad management. If you find your work difficult, however, try to work through it before you decide to quit.

A. Do you love to work with people?

B. Get to know others in the organization.

C. Think about why you want to volunteer.

D. But how do we go about volunteering?

E. It is important that you choose something that you like.

F. You'll pick up some good tips to make your work there more productive.

G. You might be surprised by how much you can do in even a little bit of time.

第四部分 书面表达（满分25分）

Dear Chris,

I am Li Hua. I am writing to keep you informed that there will be a calligraphy class next week.

As is posted, the class begins at 3:00 p.m. and ends at 5:00 p.m. next Friday in Room 301 of the main building. Following the sign, you can easily arrive there. A very famous professor from college has been invited to give us a clear introduction to improving Chinese calligraphy, which I think is of great use to you. Members in the club are welcome to attend the class and it is an amazing chance to know more about Chinese calligraphy. Finally, you might as well take an umbrella because there is often a sudden shower in the afternoon recently.

Expecting your coming and best wishes.

Yours,
Li Hua
